THE FLOWER SPIRIT.

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

When earth was in its golden prime,
 Ere grief or gloom had marr'd its hue,
And, Paradise unknown to crime,
 Beneath the love of angels grew;
Each flower was then a spirit's home,
 Each tree a living shrine of song;
And, ah! that ever hearts could roam,
 Could quit for sin that seraph's throng;

But, there the Spirit lingers yet,
 Though dimness o'er our vision fall;
And flowers, that seem with dew-drops wet,
 Weep angel tears for human thrall;
And sentiments and feelings move
 The soul, like oracles divine:
All hearts that ever bowed to love,
 First found it by the Flower's sweet shrine,

A voiceless eloquence and power—
 Language that hath no life in sound—
Still haunts, like Truth, the Spirit Flower,
 And hallows even Sorrow's ground.
The wanderer gives it memory's tear,
 Whilst home seems pictured on its leaf;
And hopes, and hearts, and voices dear,
 Come o'er him—beautiful and brief.

'Tis not the bloom—though wild or rare—
 It is the spirit power within
Which melts and moves our souls to share
 The Paradise we here might win.
For Heaven itself around us lies,
 Not far, nor yet our reach beyond,
And we are watched by angel eyes,
 With hope and faith still fond!

I will believe a spirit dwells
 Within the flower—least change of all
That of the passed immortals tells
 The glorious meeds before man's fall!
Yet, still'—though I may never see
 The mystic grace within it shine,—
Its essence is sublimity,
 Its feeling all divine!

THE LADY'S LEAP.

A LEGEND OF THE WARS OF THE ROSES.

BY HENRY WILLIAM HERBERT.

Even at this day, one of the wildest and most purely pastoral districts in all England is that region of the West Riding of Yorkshire which lies between Lancashire on the south and west and a part of Westmoreland on the north, and which is divided on the east, from the more populous portions of the fine country to which it belongs, by the waters of the great northern river Ure, destined, after twice changing its name, and swallowing up tributaries mightier than itself, to fall into the North Sea as the Humber. To this day, in the whole of that large tract, there is no large town; nothing, indeed, that we should dignify, in the United States, by the title of a considerable village.

It abounds, however, in the most splendid scenery; it contains some of the loftiest hills, as Ingleborough, Whernside, and Pensingant, and is watered by the loveliest rivers, the Nid, the Wharfe, the Eyre, and many a tributary torrent, [illegible]—it is a land of hills and dales, or, as they are termed in the north country dialect, the fells and the ghylls. The population sparse, simple, hospitable, and contented, are scattered, through the narrow vales which intersect the huge round-topped heathery ridges, in hamlets small, indeed, but picturesque and happy, earning enough to supply their few and trivial wants by cultivating the narrow verge of soft green meadow land, which everywhere forms the bottom of the ghylls, and pasturing their flocks and herds, of moorland sheep and kyloes, upon the heath-clad hills, on which each farm possesses a free commonage.

In the times, however, of the wars of the Roses, during the fatal strife of the kindred houses of York and Lancaster, which constitute the cruelist and bloodiest page of Britain's history, the Ghyllsland was a pure pastoral, a purely feudal region.

The great Earl of Warwick, from his castle of Middleham, a little way to the eastward on the waters of the Ure, the Prior of Bolton Abbey on the Wharfe, and the Egremonts of Barden Tower, were all the great proprietors throughout that rugged country; and so lightly did the feudal rule of the good monks and popular nobles press on their vassals, that they might be called the freest population in all England; a few simple quit-rents of the produce of their farms, a few days of man-service when their lords waged war on the wild beasts, which were then plentiful in the forest, or on one other in the field of civil strife, constituted the whole of their duties; and these, in those dark and bloody days, were looked upon almost as privileges. Every dalesman was in those days an archer, and, as such, a huntsman and a soldier; and, to have been debarred from following his lord's hounds on the fell, his lord's banner on the field, he would have looked upon not as a privelege, but as a penalty and a disgrace.

The bloody field of Towton had been fought about ten days, and the whole north of England was filled with terror, lamentation, and despair. Some forty thousand men had fallen, in their harness, on that field of "gentle blood," after which a baron of the old Norman blood was more rarely to be seen for half a century in England, as the old saying ran, than a wolf or a wild boar.

Nor had the Ghyllsmen escaped their share of the slaughter; nor where their humble homes exempt from the desolation, which smote yet more heavily the towers of their feudal liege lords.

That country, like the rest of England, had been divided in some sort against itself; for the men of the eastern fells had followed the Bear and Ragged staff of Warwick, the great king-maker, to bloody triumph; the westlanders had marched to horrible defeat for the ill-fated cause of Lancaster, under the Prior of Bolton's bailiffs and the Lady of Barden's seneschal.

The days of chivalry were passed; and the spirit of chivalry had died out, choked by the fiercer fire of intestine warfare. Edward, the Burgher King, as his enemies were wont to call him, although a leader in the field and a soldier in the melee, had little of the cavalier, less of the gentle knight, in his iron composition. None knew more stoutly how to fight, nor kingly how to conquer.—None knew more bloodily, more brutally, how to gather in the fruits of victory. No veneration of old age, no pity of green youth, no tenderness for sex, no respect for valor, ever once moved his heart of steel to remit the bloody sentence of vae victis. To be a captive enemy was to be butchered summarily upon the field, or reserved yet more pitilessly for the scaffold.

No wonder, then, if between mourning for their dead and trembling for their living, the fugitive Lancastrians shuddered in their wild ghylls at every blast of wind that whistled through their mountain gorges, magnified by their fears into the fatal clangor of the Yorkist trumpet.

The vassals, it is true, were suffered, unless taken under arms red-handed, to escape the penalty of their faith to their feudal lords; since loyalty of that nature both sides alike desired to promote, and neither dared in policy to punish. The cottage, therefore, oftentimes afforded to the lowly peasant that shelter which that abbey could not yield to its reserved prior, nor the Norman castle to its haughty noble.

It was the tenth night after that terrible defeat, and the Lady of Barden Tower sat lonely by the dim embers and dull lamplight of her mournful hall; now striving to draw consolation from the pages of her illuminated missal, now listening gloomily to the fierce gusts of the autumn wind, as it roared and wailed about the turrets; to the incessant pelting of the storm upon the roofs; to the wild raving of the tortured Wharfe, as flooded by the torrents from the hills, it chafed and howled among the rocks, which pent up its maddened waters in the dale below. Almost she fancied now that she could hear the war cries and the trumpets, the pattering arrow flights on mail shirt and steel hemlet, the cries and curses of the desperate and the dying, in the voices of the winter tempest.

Her tenants had returned home unmolested; their dead had been laid in holy earth, within the abbey precincts, in the lower glen. Herself she had seen their dust consigned to dust, their ashes unto ashes; herself she had given tears to their dead from those stern eyes, which refused to weep when her own lord fell under shield, as the phrase ran, full knightly; herself she had consoled their widows with her sympathy, and salved their wounds with gold; and now she sat alone, as I have said, disconsolate, almost despairing, in the gloom of her widowed hall.

Yet she feared nothing, thought of nothing touching her own losses, her own sorrows, her own safety; save as her people, decimated by the sword of York, were sorrowing; save as her trustiest knights were hunted by the hounds of Warwick; save as her king was again an exile afar from the land of his fathers; save as her own and lovely daughter was imperiled by her loyalty. For, though her vassals had returned, the gray-haired seneschal who led them to the field, and who had fought beside her husband's rein in Guienne and Poitou, was yet a fugitive, wounded and weak, as tidings had already reached her, not daring to return to his own home, whither most certainly he should be hunted—for the good knight who bore her banner, Sir Amelot de Manhower, was in like plight, and only bade her trust that banner to his keeping, for it was bound about his breast, till brighter days should come, and it should fly again for Egremont and Lancaster—for she had one fair daughter, the flower of all the dales; and even now she shuddered, as she thought how the bloody and licentious Edward might wreak his vengeance on herself, upon that innocent and lovely child. She shuddered, but she shrank not for one instant from her fealty; nor hesitated, even in her innocent heart, from battling yet again for Lancaster, as soon as Henry's banner should be spread again to British breezes.

While thus she sat, her tall and stately figure clad in the darkest weeds, bending above the pictured missal, her snow white locks straying dishevelled over her neck and shoulders, her dark eyes fixed on vacancy, a light and joyous step came bounding down the stone turret stairway, and paused for a moment at the door, as if in doubt whether it might enter.

But the lady heard not, heeded not, till a fluttering hand turned the ponderous lock, and the fleet foot crossed the threshold with a step so lightsome, as told sure tidings of a happy heart inspiring it.

It was as beautiful a girl as ever cheered a widowed mother's solitude, not past her eighteenth summer, and looking yet more youthful than she was, from the extreme brilliancy and brightness of her pure complexion, the sunny loveliness of her long golden tresses, and the expression of exquisite innocence and candour which lighted up her azure eyes. The Lady of Barden raised her eyes and fixed them fondly on her child, and a mournful smile played over her pallid features as she looked upon her, joyous still and radient in the midst of peril and dismay.

"Ever gay, ever joyous, Eleanor," she said—with a half reproachful gesture of the head; "and what can you find, in these dark and dreadful days, to light up that merry beacon in your eye; to kindle that gay smile upon your lip? But, youth! youth! It is still the part of youth to hope, as it is of age, sad age, to despair."

"Nay, mother dear," said the girl, in a whisper, when she stood close behind the lady's footstool, having closed the door carefully behind her; "but there is cause of joy now; yes great cause of joy; for he has returned, and safely, too, or, at least, not badly wounded, and is hard by, looking to us, as well he may, for succor."

"Who has returned? Whom do you mean, Eleanor?"

"Whom do I mean, mother?" she exclaimed, her cheek paling for the moment with the intensity of her feeling. "Whom should I mean but Amelot?"

"Sir Amelot de Manhower!" replied the lady. "I had not thought of this. He should not have come.—What shall we do to save him? There is a Yorkist force even now at Settle." Thus far she had spoken musingly, as if in thoughtful commune with herself; but now her eye brightened, and she inquired quickly, "But how can you know this? Where is Sir Amelot? Is he within the tower? Why came he not with his report to me, instead of forcing you into this peril?"

"No, dearest mother," replied the girl, eagerly; "my maiden, Marian, brought me the tidings up. She was down in the glen at sunset, ere the storm came on; and seeing her, he crawled out from his hiding-place, and bade her bring you tidings that he was hidden in the cavern under the first fall, and that no man could take him there, for that he only knows its secret. But he lacks food and wine, and the means of procuring light, which he prays you to send him.

"And why brought she not the news to me? Why did she tarry so long on the way? She must have known this these five hours."

"She dared not leave the supper-board before my hour for retiring; and dared not seek your presence, with whom she has no duty to perform, lest she should so create suspicion."

"If that were but the reason!" said the lady, relapsing into thought. "But that boy, that page, Damian! I doubt her—I doubt her much, Eleanor. Why should she have told you? Does she know that you love him, Nell?"

"Mother!" exclaimed the agitated girl, with the conscious blood flushing crimson to her brow, her cheeks, her neck. "No one—no one knows that. I don't—I don't know, mother! What mean you mother mine?" And she burst into a flood of tears, and sank into a chair, overpowed and exhausted by the mere force of her own feelings.

The lady walked up slowly to her fair child's side and laying both her withered hands in attitude of benediction on that fair, sunny head—

"Be comforted, my own sweet child. Weep not; but little can you guess of what a mother knows or knows not, whose best child's happiness is staked. Eleanor, I have known, have seen all this a year and over."

"You have seen—have known all, mother!" cried she, starting to her feet, and gazing into her mother's eyes with nascent hope. "Then you do not—you do—I mean—not disapprove? You, ah! you pardon me?"

"If I had disapproved, I had interposed to prevent.—For the rest, Eleanor, I trust—have I aught to pardon?"

"I do love him, mother."

"And he knows it?"

"He might hope, might perhaps fancy—but I—I ——Oh, mother, you do not dream that I ever told him?"

"Nor he you, Eleanor?"

"Had he but whispered it without your sanction, then I had not loved him."

"Then you have loved, yourself unloved. It is so, Eleanor?"

"Mother, no! Can you think it of me?" she exclaimed, indignantly, and again she crimsoned.

"You said he never whispered it," replied the lady, half suppressing a smile. "How then can you know it?"

"Never in words, mother; but his manner—his voice—his eyes. Oh, mother, do not! do not! You must know what I mean."

"Perfectly, dearest. His manner, his voice, and his eyes told you what he dreamed of, and yours replied as plainly. But now to the point; does Marian know, or suspect aught, think you, of these—these love passages?"

"I am certain—no, as certain as that I live."

"Send her to me at once. I mistrust her sorely.—There have been passages, I know, between her and the page Damian; and he sought leave of me, as the curfew rang, to go down to the Abbot's forester. Send her to me at once; and bid Geoffrey, the warder, take arms, with two of his best men, and wait my call in the ante-room."

Eleanor, not unwilling to escape farther questioning, and to gain time to recollect her senses, bounded from the hall; and, giving the lady's orders to the warder, hurried up to her turret chamber, and sent the girl down to her mother's presence. Then, falling on her knees by her own bedside, she thanked, from the depths of her guileless heart, the Giver of all good for the blessings he had that night granted her, and prayed, among fast flowing tear-drops, half of joy, half of sorrow, for protection to her loved Amelot.

The interview between the dreaded lady and the girl, Marian, was but brief; for, terrified already and self-conscious, she could no more endure the lady's piercing eye and calm, hard, cutting questions than the patridge can the talons and the beak of the keen goshawk. Within ten minutes from entering the hall, the lady's voice was heard, "Without there!" And, at the word, all steel from helm to shoe, with bill and bow and broadsword, the stout retainers entered.

They found the lady, impassive as her wont, writing upon a strip of parchment, and the girl prostrate at her feet, in any agony of tears and terror.

"Here, Jansen," said the lady, as she finished her writing, "bear me this scroll forthwith to the sub-prior of Bolton; and, hark you, put this wench upon a palfrey, and carry her down with you to the Abbey. There leave her in keeping of the Father Janitor. That done, await the sub-prior's orders. Perform them, be they what they may, and that with all due dilligence. Tush, wench!" she added; "tears are vain, and supplication. You should have thought of these things ere you thought to deal in treason. Lose no time, Jansen; honor and life depend upon your dilligence and fealty."

The sturdy henchman bowed, and, leading the unhappy girl away, half carried in the arms of his followers—for, ignorant what fate awaited her, she was now all but fainting—he left the proud, impassive lady to her own melancholy meditations.

They were not long, however; for, lighting a taper from her lamp, she opened a private doorway at the farther end of the hall, and, ascending a narrow staircase to an upper story, soon stood, unseen and unsuspected, at the door of her daughter's chamber.

Already had that fair young being fallen into the light and happy sleep of innocence and peace; but need was that she should be aroused; and long and anxious was the consultation that ensued on her awakening.

It had already struck the first hour past midnight, and the bells for prime were already pealing up the deep glen from Bolton's hoary towers, ere, with a heartfelt blessing, and a parting memento to be astir with the lark of [illegible] him, the mother left her child to dream of future bliss, alas! not unmixed with future peril.

Perhaps even then she had not left her, but that a hoarse resounding challenge from the gate tower, warned her that probably her emissaries had returned; and, in truth, she had scarce retrimmed her lamp, and resumed her seat in the great hall, where of late she had held vigils oft till well nigh morning, before an esquire reverently entered to say that the warden craved a hearing of the lady.

The man had little to relate, however. The sub prior, he said, had sent the bailiff for the forester, and had questioned him for some time in private, when, with the simple word that "it was too late!" he had dismissed them. The girl, Marian, he had heard, was committed to the penitentiary cell.

"You have done well, Jansen," answered the lady.—"But you have more to do. Keep watch and ward yourself to-night, with half the garrison in arms; suffer no one to enter in or go out before noon to-morrow, saving the Lady Eleanor, who will go forth mounted at day-break. If the page Damian show himself before the gates, bend your own trusty bow and send a clothyard arrow to his heart. For the rest, if any band of marauding Yorkists show themselves on our side the Wharfe, ring bancloche and fire beacon till the country is aroused, and then upon them, and cry 'Egremont for Lancaster, and give no quarter!'"

The man bowed low, and was retiring silently, when a sign checked him.

"How goes the night, Jansen? and how promises the morrow?"

"The storm has rolled away to the east, lady; the moon is up. It will be fair more the morrow."

She waved him his dismissal; and, within half an hour, except the warder at the gate-house, and the sentinels along the walls, there was not an eye open within the walls of Barden Tower.

Long ere the sun was up, however, a light foot glided down the castle stair; and the delicate and gentle Eleanor passed down into the castle hall, arrayed in plumed cap and riding skirt, with a short mantle over it, which, had its folds been disturbed, might have revealed things so incongruous to a young lady's morning ramble as a light basket girded round her slender waist on the one side, and counterbalanced by a stone flagon on the other.

No envious eye, however, fell upon her; no eye at all, indeed, save the trusty warden's, who, forewarned of her early coming forth, awaited her himself, with her palfrey saddled, at the castle gate, himself assisted her to the selle, and, opening a postern gate, let her forth, without a word of question. Only, as she rode out, he said, quietly—

"If there be need, remember, lady, this postern will be held in hand."

Bowing her head in answer, she gave her horse the rein, and cantered down into the deep an awful chasm through which the Wharfe was raging, between black walls of rock crusted with blacker forests, here tumbling, a hundred yards in width, over sheer ledges in white cataracts; here roaring, wider yet, over dread boiling rapids; and here, most hideous spot of all, pent in between the slippery ledges which spray constantly o'erflowed, a broad and powerful torrent jammed into a pass of scarce ten feet in width, arrowy, louder than a surf-beat shore, unfathomable. "The Strid," that pass is called, in the tongue of the Northmen, because a man, if he have heart enough may stride across it; for there the Boy of Egremont, the son of her who answered "Endless weeping," died miserably, nor was ever found again, pulled back by his reluctant greyhound, after his own fleet foot had crossed the chasm.

But not of that she thought; her heart was beating only with true love, and the high hope how she should save her lover. Two cataracts she had passed by, and then the perelous "Strid;" and now the farthest, the first fall, of the glen thundered down white before her, as the driven snow, a terrible stupendous cataract. The sun gleamed out just as she reached its foot; as his first rays gilt the silver foam, a human form stepped out from beneath the arch of spray, and stood before her eyes, Sir Amelot de Manhower, as yet in safety.

An instant, and she was in his arms—another, and she had torn herself from that short embrace; and with all the eloquence of young permitted love, with all the volubility of a woman's fear for whom she loves the best, was pouring out her tidings, insisting on his silence, recounting her mother's kindness, impressing on him the wisdom of her mother's plans, enforcing her own sweet injunctions.

"There, there! Not a word more," she cried. "You have told me your secret of escape; now I have to speak only, and you only to obey, if you are either good knight or true lover. Marian, my wretched girl, has betrayed you to her lover Damian; and he set off last night for Settle, to bring the soldiers down upon you. It is by God's grace alone, which sent the storms last night, that they are not here already! Make your way then, at once, like the mole underground, to Malham cove; lie hidden there till night; and, travelling by night only, hiding from dawn till twilight, make your way through the fells to Carlisle. Enter that city boldly, for we shall be there before you with six score of stout spears of Lancaster. The warden of the Marches is for us. There is no force to check us, for an hour, to the northward.—There will we all take ship for Flanders, and tarry there in peace till better days return for hapless England.—Here be provisions, wine, lights and money. Say, liegeman, will you do my bidding?"

"I were a traitor else."

"And instantly? Our horses are already saddling! The Lady of Barden Tower will take horse ere sunset!"

"For Carlisle and Flanders?"

"What? Do you doubt me? For Carlisle and Flanders."

"And, Eleanor, when we be safe in Flanders?"

"Then, Amelot, you must ask—"

"Whom?"

"Whom—if you are obedient—but your Eleanor?"

"I am obedient."

One more brief embrace, and he raised her light burthen to her saddle; and, eager to prove his obedience and good faith, disappeared behind the cataract, and plunged fearlessly into the abysses of those limestone caverns, which, undermining all that region, conduits of subterranean rivers, would lead him, miles away, to the cove of Malham.

Had he remained one minute longer, he had lingered until it was too late—for had he dreamed the peril she had yet to run, he had died before he had turned on his heel, or he had not deserved to win her.

She had just reached the Strid, when the bancloche of Barden Tower pealed forth its battle summons, and, casting her eyes down the gorge between herself and the ascent to the castle, she saw a band of archery and spears hurrying up the pass, led by the traitor Damian.

A wooded corner of the rock below, and the steep elevation on which she stood, concealed her from them for the moment. Another minute, and she would be in the hands of those who spared not sex, nor age, least of all beauty—herself and him also!

There was no passage up the glen; on this side no concealment. The thought flashed on her like the electric fluid. Across "the Strid" is honor—life—love!

That was a brave thought for a brave man's mind.—What then for a frail girl's—a girl's whose ancestor had perished in those black whirling waters?

She paused not to think twice. With a bright eye, prayer to God, she turned her horse's head, faced him at the dread pass, and with a light curb and well-plied lash, charged him right at it.

Fiery and fresh, he reared bolt upright as he felt the lash; and, ignorant of what lay in his path, charged over the black slippery rocks right onward.

His hoofs were on the very brink, when he perceived the hideous whirl of the black torrent; then he would have sheered or paused—when sheer or pause had been instant death—but it was all too late; for with a steady bridle hand, she rose him at it, and brought down the lash on his croupe with such a will of that slight arm that the thong left a bloody scote.

He sprang—his feet clanged twice upon the rocks, drowned by the roar of the river, and the clash of the bancloche, and he and his fair rider were in shelter of the deep woodland, just as the band of Yorkists, scaling the heights, stood upon the plateau, where they stood not a point of time before.

Ill went it with that band of Yorkists; worse with the traitor Damian. For, ere the gentle Eleanor, faint with the peril which now first she apprehended, had scaled the opposing bank and won the open moorland, down from the keep of Barden, with bill, and bow, and bugle-blast and battle cry, poured in treble force the vassals of her house.

"Lancaster, Egremont for Lancaster! and give no quarter!"

Within ten minutes it was over; pent in that gorge where they could neither fight nor fly, they were cut down like sheep, until not one remained to tell the tale of horror.

Damian alone they took alive; and him, in the rage and vengeance of the moment, for they believed themselves too late to save their mistress, they flung headlong into the awful chasm o'er which she had just passed in safety.

One wild cry—and no human eye again beheld him—no ear again heard of him.

But, ere the executioners returned in gory triumph home, borne like the wind by her good steed, she had descended to the abbey bridge, recrossed the brimful Wharfe, and was already weeping on her mother's bosom.

But her trials were all ended, and thence her joys began. Carlisle, Flanders, were gained in safety; and when, in the good town of Antwerp, Amelot asked his Eleanor, she said not nay! to Amelot.

Some years they lived in exile, but neither poor nor unhonored; for those were days in which the stout hand and true heart gained the wealth and fame which now fall to the lot of pedler, craft, and greed.

But when the Count of Richmond won England's crown on bloody Bosworth, Sir Amelot de Manhower stood beside him, and, ere he sat on his throne at Westminster, fair Eleanor sat, happy wife, and happy mistress, in the halls of Barden.

Nor, though the keep is now one rifted tower, the abbey but a roofless pile, have the country folk forgotten the tale which gained the fearful "Strid" its more romantic name, "The Lady's Leap."—Lady's Book.

THE YOUNG MEN OF THE AGE.—Not long since, we saw a tear gathering in the eye of an old man, as he spoke of the past and the present—of the time when he burned pine knots upon the rude home hearth for light to obtain a scanty education, and then compared the ten thousand privileges which are now scattered broadcast around every door. Oh, said he, in tremulous tones, the the young men of this day, do not appreciate the light of the age they live in. The words of the old man made us sad, while at the time, we felt mortified that so many of our young men fail to improve the advantages within their reach. They are even continually muttering about their lot, and pushing for positions where they can win the reward without the sweetening, purifying, ennobling sacrifice of toil. The mist-cloud enjoyments of a day, are eagerly sought after to the exclusion of neglect of the more honorable, intellectual and useful. In truth, few of our young men know anything of the value of the privileges around them.

JESSIE CARROL.

BY ALICE CAREY.

Down the heath and o'er the moorland
 Blows the wild gust high and higher,
Suddenly the maiden pauses
 Spinning at the cabin fire,
And out from her taper fingers
 Falls away the flaxen thread,
As some neighbor entering, whispers,
 "Jessie Carrol lieth dead."
Then pressing close her forehead
 To the window-pane, she sees
Two stout men together digging
 Underneath the church-yard trees;
And she asks in kindest accents,
 "Was she happy when she died?"
Sobbing all the while to see them
 Void the heavy earth aside;
Or, upon their mattocks leaning,
 Through their fingers numb to blow,
For the wintry air is chilly,
 And the grave-mounds white with snow,
And the neighbor answers softly,
 "Do not, dear one, do not cry;
At the break of day she asked us
 If we thought that she must die;
And when I had told her sadly,
 That I feared it would be so,
Sighed she, saying 'Twill be weary
 Digging in the church yard snow!'
Earth," I said, "was very dreary—
 That its paths at best were rough;"
And she whispered, she was ready,
 That her life was long enough.
So she lay serene and silent,
 Till the wind, that wildly drove,
Soothing her from mortal sorrow,
 Like the lullaby of Love."

Poor Kate.

A young female of the name of Kate Virginia Poole is now confined for life in the State Prison of New Hampshire, on the charge of infanticide She is a native of Scotland, and has no relative but one in this country.—Her case is a bad one, and more deserving of pity than of the law's stern penalty, if the following statement from the New Hampshire Statesman be correct. Says a writer of that paper:

"Her downfall was effected under circumstances of atrocity that cry most loudly for vengeance on its guilty author. Her arms, neck, and person are scarred with wounds received in defending herself from her diabolical aggressor; and her ruin was only accomplished when she was dragged to insensibility! With the innocent evidence in her arms, she was excluded from the house of the only relative she had in America, and, bearing it away with her, she sought in a manufacturing city, shelter for herself and babe, while she could with the labor of her hands find honorable support. This was anything but the course which would have been pursued by one conscious of guilt! In a city of strangers—a mother but not a wife—what could be expected? All doors were closed against her. She could have given away her child, but a mother's heart revolted against it. Product of shame though it was, and born to infamy though it might be, she clung to it as all that was dear to her in closed to her in one city, she fled to another. It was night when she left. Heart-broken—only bound to life by the ties which bound her as a mother—she would under other circumstances, have sought the welcome refuge of suicide. With these feelings called into a most harrowing exercise by the loneliness and misery of her situation—looking at the babe that slumbered on her breast with the brand of infamy born on its brow—is it a wonder that a mind thus tortured was swept beyond the bounds of consciousness?"

In this condition of mind, while traveling alone on the railroad, she lifted her child and threw it out of the cars. On being subsequently questioned about the affair, she answered:

"I do not recollect anything distinctly after I entered the cars. The lights, the crowd, and the motion of the cars, seemed to confuse me. I do not think I should have remembered anything, if the weight of the child, which slumbered on my lap, had not reminded me of its existence and my own situation. At last a cloud seemed to thicken about me, and everything seemed to look white that met my eyes. The child itself seemed like a feather, and appeared to float away from me unconsciously. It did not seem to fall, but to rise, and I thought I could see it for some moments afterwards!"

On being asked the question, "Do you think you had for your child the ordinary feelings and natural love of a mother?" She looked her interrogator full in his face, with eyes gushing with tears at the question, said, "Sir, I would gladly have laid down my life for it! I could have given it away while in the full consciousness of my condition, but I resolved to work myself into the grave before my child should have been separated from me.—Do you think, sir, I would part with that without which life would have been an intolerable burden?" Then she added, with deeper emotion—"Thank Heaven, it was asleep the last I remember of it, and I think it never awoke to upbraid me with a single cry!"

To our mind, there never was a clearer case of mental hallucination, at the time the alleged crime of infanticide was committed, than this, and yet the ministers of the law have doomed the unfortunate Kate to a felon's cell, while her despoiler—the dibolical author of all her wrongs and misfortunes, is suffered to go "unwhipt of justice!" Her conviction, under such circumstances, is a libel upon the State which sanctions such perversion of justice as a blot upon humanity. The House of Refuge or friendly Asylum should have received the victim, not the Penitentiary!

A SHORT STORY WITH A MORAL.—A young Yankee had formed an attachment for a daughter of a rich old farmer, and after agreeing with the bonnie lassie, went to the old farmer to ask consent; and, during the ceremony—which was an awkward one with Jonathan—he whittled away at a stick. The old man watched the movement of the knife, and at the same time continued to talk on the prospects of his future son-in-law, as he supposed, until the stick had dwindled down to naught. He then spoke as follows:

"You have fine property; you have steady habits; good enough looking; but you can't have my daughter. Had you made something, no matter what, of the stick you have whittled away, you could have had her; as it is, you cannot, your property will go as the stick did, little by little, until all is gone, and your family is reduced to want. I have read your true character; you have my answer."

SURMISE WITH CHARITY.—A kind hearted old lady was once reproved quite sharply by her friend for giving money to a stranger, who seemed to be very poor, when he asked charity in the streets of Boston. "Suppose he spent the money for rum?" said the censorious and suspicious friend. The quick and noble answer was, "If you must 'suppose' at all, why not 'suppose' that he will spend the money for bread! Why suppose anything that is evil about any one, when you are at liberty to suppose what is good and noble?" That old lady had the true Christian spirit.

☞ Suction appears to be the main principle of human life. Babes practice it a large portion of their time; boys and girls consume incredible quantities of candy and sugar plums by its means; and men who are most skilful at "sucking in" their followers receive the highest honors.

Pierce and Scott's Letters of Acceptance.

CONCORD, June 15, 1852.

GENTLEMEN:—I have the honor to acknowledge your kindness in presenting me this day your letter, officially informing me of my nomination by the Democratic National Assembly, as a candidate for the Presidency of the United States.

The surprise with which I received the intelligence of my nomination, was not unmingled with painful solicitude, and yet it is proper for me to say, that the manner in which it was conferred was peculiarly gratifying.

The delegation from New Hampshire, with all the glow of State pride, and with all the warmth of personal regard, would not have submitted my name to the Convention, nor would they have cast a vote for me, under circumstances other than that which occurred.

I shall always cherish with pride and gratitude the recollection of the fact that the voice which first pronounced for me and pronounced alone, came from the mother of States—a pride and gratitude rising above any consequences that can betide me personally. May I not regard it as a fact pointing to the overthrow of sectional jealousies, and looking to the permanent life and vigor of the union cemented by the blood of those who have passed to their reward? A Union wonderful in its formation, boundless in its hopes, and amazing in its destiny. I accept the nomination, relying upon abiding devotion to the interest, honor and glory of the whole country, but above and beyond all, upon a power superior to all human might.

A power which from the first gun of the revolution through every crisis through which we have passed—in every hour of acknowledged peril, when the dark clouds have shut down around us—have interposed as if to baffle human wisdom—outmarched human foretaste, and bring out of darkness the rainbow of promise—weak myself, but in faith I hope I repose my security.

I accept the nomination upon the Platform adopted by the Convention, not because it is expected of me as a candidate, but because the principles it embraces command THE APPROBATION OF MY JUDGMENT; and with them I think I can safely say, that there has been no word or action of my life in conflict with it

I can only tender my grateful acknowledgment to the Convention of which you were members, and to the people of our common country. I am with highest respect, your most obedient servant.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

To Hon. J. S. Barbour, J. Thompson, Alpheus Felch, Pierre Soule.

WASHINGTON, June 24 1852.

SIR—I have had the honor to receive from your hands the official notice of my "unanimous nomination as the Whig candidate for the office of President of the United States," together with "a copy of the resolutions passed by the Convention, expressing their opinions upon some of the most prominent questions of national policy."

This great distinction—conferred by a numerous, intelligent and patriotic body, representing millions of my countrymen—sinks deep into my heart. Remembering the very eminent names which were before the Convention in amicable competition with my own, I am made to feel—oppressively—the weight of responsibility belonging to my new position.

Not having written a word to procure this distinction, I lost not a moment after it had been conferred in addressing a letter to one of your members, to signify what would be, at the proper time, the substance of my reply to the Convention; and I now have the honor to repeat in a more formal manner, as the occasion justly demands, that I accept the nomination with the resolutions annexed.

The political principles and measures laid down in these resolutions are so broad that but little is left for me to add. I, therefore, barely suggest, in this place, that should I, by the partiality of my countrymen, be elevated to the chief magistracy of the Union, I shall be ready, in my connection with Congress, to recommend or to approve of measures in regard to the management of public domain, so as to secure an early settlement of the same, favorable to actual settlers, but consistent, nevertheless, with a due regard to the equal rights of the whole American people, in that vast national inheritance and, also, to recommend or approve of a single alteration in our naturalization laws, suggested by my military experience, viz:—Giving to all foreigners the right of citizenship, who shall faithfully serve in time of war one year on board of our public ships, or in our land forces—regular or volunteer—on their receiving an honorable discharge from the service.

In regard to the general policy of the administration, if elected, I should of course, look among those who may approve that policy for the agents to carry it into execution; and I should seek to cultivate harmony and fraternal sentiments throughout the Whig party, without attempting to reduce its members by proscription, to exact conformity to my views. But I should, at the same time, be rigorous in regard to qualifications for office, retaining and appointing no one neither deficient in capacity or integrity, or in devotion to liberty, to the constitution, and the Union.

Convinced that harmony or good will between the different quarters of our broad country is essential to the present and future interests of the republic, and with a devotion to those interests that can know no South and no North, I should neither countenance nor tolerate any sedition, disorder, faction, or resistance to the law or the Union, on any pretext, in any part of the land; and I should carry into the civil administration this one principle of military conduct—obedience to the legislative and judicial departments of government, each in its constitutional sphere, saving only in respect to the Legislature the possible resort to the veto power, always to be most cautiously exercised, and under the strictest restraints and necessities.

Finally, for my strict adherence to the principles of the Whig party, as expressed in the resolutions of the convention, and herein suggested, with a sincere and earnest purpose to advance the greatness and happiness of the republic, and thus to cherish and encourage the cause of constitutional liberty throughout the world, avoiding every act and thought that might involve our country in an unjust or unnecessary war, or impair the faith of treaties, and the discountenancing all political agitation injurious to the interests of society and dangerous to the Union, I can offer no other pledge or guaranty, than the known incidents of a long public life, now undergoing the severest examination.

Feeling myself highly fortunate in my associate on the ticket, and with a lively sense of my obligations to the Convention, and to your personal courtesies, I have the honor to remain, sir, with great esteem, your most obedient servant.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

To the Hon. J. G. Chapman, President of the Whig National Convention.

LEADING WHIGS GOING OFF.—"G," the Washington correspondent of the Clipper, who was a reporter at the Whig National Convention, writes as follows:

"We have scarcely been in the city long enough, since our return from Baltimore, to ascertain the extent of disaffection among the whig politicians; but we learn that all, or nearly all, the twelve or thirteen of the members of Congress, who seceded from the last whig caucus will not "go the nomination" and that Messrs. Stephens and Toombs of Georgia, are likewise in the same category. Such is the talk about the capitol.

We can state with more certainty that Mr. J. W. Howe, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Joshua R. Giddings, of Ohio, are dead against the proceedings of the Convention. They will, in all probability, help to re-build the Free-Soil party."

We were informed by a gentleman from Franklin, last week, that a letter had been received in that place from Mr. Howe, in which he "defined his position" as hostile to the election of Gen. Scott.—What will the Whigs of this Congressional District say to this? "This is the unkindest cut of all!"—Crawford Democrat.

"SUM SNAIX.—About a week ago, Mr. Isaac Barber of Guilford, killed fifty-six black snakes, in a ledge or pile of rocks near his house. They were from three to six and a half feet long. Under one of the stones which were upturned in search of the reptiles, were found fifty eggs of the same loathsome race, which were also demolished. We begged hard to be excused from believing the whole of this story, but our informant wouldn't throw off a single snake. Mr. Barber certainly deserves well of his country.—Brattleboro' (Vt.,) Eagle.

A Tragedy—An Extraordinary Character.

A man by the name of Lapham, who resided for many years in this city, was recently tried and convicted at Detroit for the crime of poisoning his wife. Dr. Benedict of Scriba was a witness on the trial, and has furnished us with some interesting facts disclosed and detailed in its progress, from which we learn that Lapham came to his city in 1845 from the Auburn State prison, where he had served a term of four years for the crime of bigamy, of which he was convicted in Erie county. He came to this city an utter stranger, and passed under the assumed name of Peter Gabriel, and here won in some degree the confidence and respect of the community, and married a Miss Stone of a respectable family in the adjoining town of Scriba. In 1850, Gabriel travelled in the Southern counties in this State, practicing in the capacity of a Dentist. He became acquainted with, and married a respectable lady at Borodino, Onondaga county, the same year. After spending some two weeks with his new wife, he left her under pretence of anxiety to see his two children residing at his country seat near Oswego, after which he would rejoin his wife, and make a tour westward with her. It appears that Gabriel then went to the city of Detroit, and wrote his wife in Scriba to join him with her two children. With full confidence in the fidelity of her husband, with the affection of a wife and undying love of a mother, she followed him to Detroit in October 1850.

Gabriel set up in Detroit as Physician, and practiced as such till June 1851, when his devoted wife was taken sick. He administered poison and killed her. He refused to call other counsel, at the urgent solicitations of his wife, made in the agonies of death. The circumstance of her death excited public suspicion, and her remains after being consigned to the grave, were disinterred and examined. A sufficient quantity of morphine was found in her stomach to kill half a dozen of persons. Gabriel was arrested, imprisoned, and in May last convicted of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to solitary confinement during his natural life, the penalty imposed for murder under the laws of Michigan. The abolition of the death penalty there, doubtless induced Gabriel to select that ground for the commission of the foul deed.

The career of Gabriel as disclosed on his trial shows one of the most striking cases of the total depravity of the human heart, and one of the most extraordinary characters on record. We have not room for the details furnished by Dr. Benedict, and as the Doctor has learned from investigation the life of Gabriel, and promises to give full disclosures hereafter, when it can be done without injury to the living, we conclude the subject at present with this brief summary.—Oswego Daily Times.

FROM SANTA FE.—A letter in the St. Louis Republican gives some item of news from Santa Fe.—The correspondent says:

Col. Sumner has removed his head-quarters from Albuquerque to Santa Fe, whether permanently or not, remains to be seen—so that it is not a civil government, under control of the military. Perhaps things may go on smoothly under the present arrangement, yet I am a little apprehensive that some trouble may grow out of it.

The Commissary Department, at Fort Union, was entered, a short time since, and a large amount of provisions abstracted. A party of soldiers pursued a number of the thieves into the mountains, and succeeded in capturing two of them. They were taken in irons to Santa Fe.

Philip Garcia was executed on the 29th May at Tome, for killing his fellow-prisoner, to whom, for trival offence, he had been chained. Before his companion was dead, he cut off his leg, and was just in the act of escaping, when he was secured, and, shortly after, tried.

The mail from San Antonio reached Santa Fe on the 27th, said to have been the best trip that mail has made. It met the train Messrs. Bent, Chouteau, and pleasure party of Ladies and Gentlemen, who were at Council Grove, as also McManna's party—the health of all very good.

Quite a number of Mexican trains were on the road, and some other Americans. Ross and Wethered's company are progressing finely now, since the rains are over. Could some discretion be used by all traversing the plains, and as little travel on them as possible during the rainy season, I am fully convinced that less sickness would be known—especially does this apply to the troops, taken from their quarters and exposed to rain and mud, night

HAYTI.—Recent advices from the Island of St. Domingo, inform us that demonstrations of hostility had been made by Soloque, Emperor of Hayti, towards the Dominician portion of the Island. This intelligence is confirmed by Captain Rice, of the brig Isabella Reid, from Cape Haytien, June 10.—The Emperor is reported to be actively engaged in warlike preparations against the Dominicians, by conscriptions which require all male subjects between the ages of sixteen and sixty to join the army, and it is said 30,000 men have already been added to the list. We have many reports of this tenor, "full of sound and fury, signifying nothing."

General Scott "Going at the Knees."

We published the other day a list of some dozen or fifteen prominent whig members of Congress who had refused to support General Scott for the Presidency. Our exchanges bring us a few more facts of the same sort:

William Hayden, a prominent whig in Massachusetts, has avowed his attention to vote for "honest Frank Pierce."

Thomas D. Walpole, of Hancock county, Indiana, heretofore a whig leader in the state Senate, and in 1848 one of the Taylor candidates for presidential elector, has come out in warm opposition to the election of Gen. Scott.

William Wright, a few years since the whig candidate for Governor New Jersey, and the chief man of that party in the state, participated in the meeting at Newark, to ratify the nomination of Pierce and King and will warmly exert himself for their election.

Col. A. G. Ege, lately a whig member of the Maryland legislature from Carroll county, made a speech the other day in favor of Pierce and King at the ratification meeting at Carlisle, Pensylvania.

Gen. Hartell has also abandoned the whig party and will lend a hand to elect Pierce and King.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Express, says that Col. William Campell (the present whig Governor of Tennessee, who served in the Mexican war) has "telegraphed, to the Tenessee members of Congress that he will not abide by the nomination" of Scott. If we did not have this on such undoubted whig authority, we could hardly believe it.

James M. Taylor, of Mobile, who was a leader in the "Union party" movements, in a letter to the president of the last Union State Convention, withdraws his name "from different posts assigned" him by that body, and declares his enthusiastic support for Pierce and King.

The Boston Daily Advertiser proposes to conduct the Scott campaign on the following sorry basis:

"We hope there will be a disposition of the whigs of the state, however hopeless they may be of the success of this nomination, to unite in support of the nominated candidate, as the only rallying point of the efforts of the party."

Casper W. Bell, of Chariton county Missouri, declines to serve as a whig sub elector. The central committee have supplied his place with William H. Switzler, who made Scott speeches before the nomination. He probably has a stomach for such a fight.

The Bridgeport, Ohio, Farmer, edited by Dr. J. O. Affleck, a strong whig says:

"Of General Scott, we shall say little. His qualifications for the Presidency are purely military, and were he in that department greater than the conqueror of Napoleon, we should hesitate to approach the ballot-box in his favor. Nature seldom bestows two great gifts on one person. If she has given him 'the art of war,' which is generally acknowledged, we think his consumate vanity should be satisfied."—New York Eve. Post.

☞ Mr. Clay leaves three sons, no daughters.—But one of his sons, Thomas, was with him when he died. He is the eldest and a farmer, residing in Lexington, and near Ashland. He is about 50 years old. James B. Clay, Mr. Clay's second son, and the late Charge to Portugal, is a farmer, engaged in heavy business near St. Louis. He is about 36. John, the youngest son, is about 30 years old, and resides in Ashland with his mother. Mr. Clay, has had twelve children, and but three of the number survive him. It is said that he has left a competency for his family.

ERIE, PA.

SATURDAY MORNING, JULY 10, 1852.

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

FOR PRESIDENT,

GEN. FRANKLIN PIERCE,

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT,

WILLIAM R. KING,

OF ALABAMA.

FOR CANAL COMMISSIONER.

WM. SEARIGHT of Fayette County.

Sunbury and Erie Railroad.

We are pleased to learn from our Philadelphia exchanges, and also from Judge Galbraith, just returned from that city, that the prospects of the Sunbury and Erie road are of the most flattering character. Arrangements are in progress that, when fully consummated, will put the largest part of the road in the hands of Contractors. The company have now over two millions of dollars subscribed, beyond some contingent subscriptions, and it is expected the Engineers will be upon the line here and at Williamsport during the present month for the purpose of locating the work.

"The Glorious Fourth."

To use a Hibernianism, "The Glorious Fourth" came on the 5th this year, and such a day in Erie;—we ne'er shall look upon its like again, we fear! "All the world and the rest of mankind," including part of Conneaut, came to town and brought their wives, and daughters, and aunts, and relatives generally, "even to the fourth generation." To tell what was done would be impossible—it would be much easier to enumerate what was not done. One thing, however, we can say: the bells were rung, guns were fired, and fire-crackers exploded, until the tympanum of our ears felt more like inverted brass-kettles than a channel of communication to the senses. If we felt disposed to follow the usual course of Fourth of July descriptions, we might enlarge upon the beautiful manner our firemen decorated their engines, and their and their guests from Conneaut neat and tasteful dress; the fine display made by the military, together with the various Divisions of the "Sons," the Harp and Shamrock, and the German Benevolent Societies. We might elaborate upon the creditable and able manner each and severally the orators and readers of the day acquitted themselves, and the fifty other points of interest on such occasions; but as all this has been very extensively set forth in the other city papers, we forbear filling our columns with further details. Suffice it to say, the day was fine, the crowd was immense, and in the best possible humor with themselves and their neighbors, and that not an accident happened to mar the festivities.

Will be Crowded Off.

The Crawford Democrat expresses the belief that John H. Walker, Esq., will be the whig candidate for Congress in this District. The Democrat is mistaken—John H. Walker will not be the whig candidate! We know our amiable neighbor would be glad to be the candidate—has determined in his own mind to be—but: mark what we say, he will not be nominated! The whig party goes in for success, hence dare not nominate Walker. He was a "good enough Morgin" in our old district, when there was not hope of his success, but in the new district—a district he thinks he can carry—he will be thrust aside for a more available candidate! "The good of the party" demands that he shall stand one side, and to one side he will have to go, and no mistake. To this result he may as well make up his mind first as last, for to this will it surely come. His political day and generation in Erie county is over with—his sun has set—went down in a cloud, and his political future, like a bad night, is enveloped in darkness. That we have contributed [illegible] we rather glory in it. 'Tis true he may make a few spasmodic efforts to rise—his friends, what few political friends he has, may attempt to rescue him, but the dead weight attached to his political neck will sink him so deep that the last political trump will never reach his ears! Sic transit glori, Walker!

☞ DROWNED.—On Monday last, James Sweeney, Captain of the Canal Boat, J. R. St. Clear, fell into one of the locks in this city, and was drowned. It is not known where his friends reside, or whether he has any in this country or not. He was in the employ of M. B. Lowry, Esq., and had been since last December. He was a native of Ireland, about 5 feet 11 inches in height, somewhat pock-marked—rather intelligent, and aged about 35 years.

☞ A very disgraceful riot took place at the Farmers' Hotel, in this city, on the evening of the 5th, the primary cause of which was—whiskey! It ought to be stated, however, in justice to the very worthy gentleman who keeps that House, that the persons engaged in it did not obtain their liquor at his bar. He has always endeavored to keep a quiet, respectable House, and it was his refusal to give the rioters drink that induced the melee.—The rioters had succeeded in clearing the House, by threats and force, when the Mayor and Police appeared upon the ground and endeavored by peaceable means to quell the disturbance—not succeeding in which a general fight took place in which our worthy Mayor, Gen. Whallon, and the Chief of Police, Col. Loomis, showed their training to admiration. In the melee several of our most peaceable citizens got "knocked into the middle of next week," and it was not until there was several broken heads and disfigured faces, that "peace reigned in Denmark." On Tuesday all engaged in the fight, that were able to appear, were brought up before Justice LAIRD and bound over to answer the charge at the August Court.

☞ THE NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY.—We have received No. 2 of the 'National Portrait Gallery of Distinguished Americans,' which is now in course of publication by ROBERT E. PETERSON, & Co., Philadelphia. The whole work, when complete, will contain upwards of one hundred and twenty engraved portraits, with full biographical sketches accompanying them. The number before us contains three fine steel engravings of GEO. WASHINGTON, and one of MARTHA WASHINGTON. Altogether it will form a valuable American Work, and we recommend it to the attention of the public. It will be published in weekly numbers, at 25 cents each—forty numbers completing the series.

☞ Our neighbor of the Gazette is a great wag, or his organ of hope sticks out farther from his cranium than any other live whig in the country. In his last he tells us Scott is sure to carry the South—is going to sweep over the whole southern country with as resistless force as Harrison did in 1840. Now, as we said before, the editor that publishes such an idea must be an inveterate wag, delighting to hoax his readers, or the most hopeful specimen of the editorial fraternity extant. We wonder if his conclusions in regard to Gen. Scott's prospects at the south are based upon such extracts as this, from the Washington correspondent of the New York Express, a whig paper.

"The Letter of General Scott is not of that character, I hear, which will satisfy the extreme Southern whigs. Mr. Toombs gives out that he will avail himself of the first opportunity to shew that Gen. Scott, neither in his principles nor in his associates, is to be trusted by Southern men. Mr. Williams, of Tenn., announces that he will use his influence against him in that State. Mr. Gentry is silent, but not hopeful. These and other Southern signs indicate that Georgia and Tennessee, and probably Florida, are lost States, and the loss must be made up in Ohio, or elsewhere in the Northwest. In Maryland a good whig fight will be made with gains in Baltimore, but losses elsewhere. Kentucky, it is believed the whigs will carry."

☞ If any of the "sovereign people" desire hotter weather than the past few days, they must "push it South"—it can't be had here; the thermometer is'nt long enough.

☞ The Louisiana broke her shaft yesterday, between this and Buffalo. No other damage done, we believe.

Military Citizens.—Gen. Scott's Letter.

The soldier candidate for the Presidency of this Republic draws a breath of relief that the Gag has been taken from his mouth, and in his letter accepting the whig nomination—copied in full in another column—he makes it a merit and boast that he has not been permitted to trust himself to paper; and most truly does this, his first letter after getting out of training, show the prudence of these councelors who are endeavoring to make a President of a man to whose common sense they cannot trust pen and ink.

Gen. Scott is a great military man—there is no doubt of that—and were that the only essential, he would undoubtedly make a pattern Executive—but fortunately for the country, but most unfortunately for the whig party, that is not the only essential in the eyes of a vast majority of the intelligent voters of this country. That majority look for something higher—something more ennobling, more in consonance with the theory and structure of our government and institutions than mere military talent. In Gen. Scott they see none of the qualities for which they are in search—nothing of the statesman, or the clear-headed expounder of the political institutions of the country. Indeed, from all we have read from his pen, both of a former and the present date, it is pretty evident his ideas of the powers of, and latitude under, the constitution are of the vaguest and most unstatesmanlike character. For instance; having in his days of honest freedom spoken out his true sentiments of hostility to the citizenship of Foreigners—vide, his letter to Reid in 1841, declaring that he hesitates between total prohibition or a limit of twenty-one years, his mind inclining to the former—he has, in his letter accepting the whig nomination, deemed it necessary to stultify himself and present the nation with a shorter receipt for inducting foreigners into a knowledge of our civil and political institutions; and for conferring upon them the privileges of those institutions. And mark you, too, this receipt for making citizens is the result of his "military experience." Truly is Gen. Scott a wonderful statesman—a remarkable close reader of the instrument he is so anxious to swear to maintain in all its parts. But here is the receipt to make citizens.

"The political principles and measures laid down in those resolutions are so broad that there is little left for me to add. I, therefore, barely suggest in this place, that should I, by the partiality of my countrymen, be elevated to the chief magistracy of the Union, I shall be ready, in my connection with Congress, to recommend or to approve of measures in regard to the management of the public domain, so as to secure an early settlement of the same, favorable to actual settlers, but consistent, nevertheless, with a due regard to the equal rights of the American people in that vast national inheritance, and also to recommend or approve of a single alteration in our naturalization laws, suggested by my military experience, viz:—Giving to all foreigners the right of citizenship, who shall faithfully serve, in time of war, one year on board of our public ships, or in our land forces—regular or volunteer—on their receiving an honorable discharge from the service."

The Constitution says, "Congress shall have power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization." This would be a "uniform rule" with a vengeance. Besides, set aside the constitutional objection to the adoption of such a system, and there is still a light through which Gen. Scott's proposition does not exhibit a very flattering face. In "establishing a uniform rule of naturalization," Congress was actuated, doubtless, by a desire to give to all the earliest possible chance to become citizens, consistent with the genius of our institutions. Those institutions are founded upon the knowledge of the people—hence it was, that five years residence was deemed essential for a foreigner to become acquainted with their theory, workings and practice.—It was to enable him to obtain KNOWLEDGE—knowledge that was impossible to obtain before he took up his residence among us, and without which he could not exercise the privileges he sought understandingly. But Gen. Scott tells us, in effect, that he is convinced from his "military experience," that those who go as far as possible from the influence of our civil institutions—who submit to the drill of the camp and the cats of the man-of-war, are as well qualified to become citizens in one year as he who, "refusing to learn war any more," sets himself down in the peaceful walks of civil life, and there patiently waits his five years! [illegible] ship of your statesmanship based upon "military experience"—a statesmanship which proposes to override the Constitution in order to offer a bribe for votes, and at the same time hide sentiments honestly expressed in previous communications. Here is statesmanship which at once sets forth the whole principle of an army administration; military services before all other merit—a bribe to war—a bribe to soldiering—because by war and soldiering the highest privileges of our country are obtained. To us it appears that such foreigners as would be willing to purchase citizenship under the drill sergeant or the cat-o'-nine-tails, would scarcely prove the best members of a civil government; and it is rating the intelligence of American citizens very low to suppose they would be willing to make a man President who thus proposes to educate an army of soldiers ready to make war upon institutions they have had no means of comprehending. The threats in this letter against "sedition, disorder and faction," words always applied by arbitrary rulers to those who differ from them, when taken in connection with this proposition to enact an un-"uniform rule of naturalization," lead strongly to the inference that tranquility may be preserved upon the Louis Napoleon principle of bayonets and bullets, when the President has thus at his command a large number of camp-taught "citizens"—men who have been accustomed to look to him as the source of their sustenance, and also, of all authority. If Gen. Scott had any chance for the Presidency as an old soldier, this letter of acceptance is enough of itself to destroy it.

☞ GEORGIA.—The Union party of Georgia, which is composed principally of whigs, repudiate the nominations of Scott and Graham and have called a State Convention to meet on the 14th of July to decide what action to take. Messrs. Toombs and Stephens have telegraphed to their friends not to endorse the nominations. All the whig papers in Georgia openly declare their determination never to go for Scott and say that he cannot and will not be supported by any respectable body of men in that State, of either party. Some of them urge the nomination of a Southern Union candidate. We have no doubt ourselves that the vote of Georgia will be given to Pierce and King, and as it was one of the States that voted for General Taylor, we cannot see how Scott is to be elected—especially as it is now morally certain that New York, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts, all Taylor States, will go for Pierce and King!

Truth fitly Spoken.

The Cleveland True Democrat, a paper that hates the Democracy with all the vehemence of an ultra free soiler, has a most capital article upon the proneness of politicians and political Editors to underrate the military services of the two candidates for the Presidency. It says, "the quarrel between the two parties about the military movements of Gen. Pierce is all stuff;" and then, after complimenting Scott in generous terms, not one sentiment of which we do not fully endorse, it turns to Gen. Pierce and says:

"So on the other hand Gen. Franklin Pierce, though claiming to be no soldier in the sense in which that word is applied to Scott, behaved well in the Mexican war. He fought as bravely as the best. No one questions his courage. C. M. Clay, who knew him well, endorses that, and his soldier like conduct. But there is another chapter not yet noticed by his friends, which should be written, and published, by all who make a serious account of his military life. Gen. Pierce arrived in Mexico soon after the capture of Vera Cruz, and was detained with his command, in the sickly, or Vomito Region, as we mistake not some six weeks. The peril to the health of his soldiery was imminent. Yet by care, such as only kind men practice, by a steady and an earnest watchfulness over the habits and comforts of his soldiery, he saved them from sickness. Better such conduct far that common bravery on the battle field. Nobler, by all odds, is the spirit which guards life at the hazard of life, than the fell purpose which exposes life, to take life. And this praise is due Gen. Pierce.

Let this partizan conflict, about military matters, cease. Scott has done his duty well, and nobly, as a soldier, and Pierce, in his short military career, met every responsibility fully, like a man and an officer. Why not then, acknowledge justly the merit of each, and fight the battle of politics upon principles (if there be any) which separate the parties which each represent?"

☞ The New York Mirror (whig) was the first that applied the sobriquet of "Fuss and Feathers" to Gen. Scott.

For the Observer.

MR. EDITOR:—Will you allow me the use of your columns for a few words. I know I have no political claim upon you, for I am a whig, and shall vote against your candidate in November; I shall not do so, however, because he lives in New Hampshire, the constitution of which recognizes sectarianism. Sectarianism I despise, and to vote against a person because he lives in a State recognizing it, would be the rankest kind of bigotry. But how I shall vote is not what I wish to call your attention to, at this time. You have doubtless not forgot that the Editor of the Gazette was among the loudest and fiercest in denouncing the sectarianism of the New Hampshire constitution—its religious tests, and its anti-republican provisions in regard to property, &c.. He denounced Gen. Pierce because he lived in that State. He called, in effect, upon all Catholics to vote against him on that account. He made "long prayers that he might be heard of men," and he thanked God that his candidate—my candidate—was free from the political leprosy of that poor Publican and Sinner, Gen. Pierce. I despised this hypocritical cant of my party Editor then, but how much more do I despise it since the incidents of the 5th have come to my knowledge. What I allude to I need not repeat, suffice it to say that this Editor was one of the committee to make arrangements for a General celebration of all the Sabbath Schools on the 5th, but after obtaining money from all denominations, the Sabbath Schools of two denominations were not invited to participate. True, this Editorial member of the committee attempts an apology in the last number of his paper, but a lamer or more impotent excuse, and a more apt illustration of the truth of the saying, "the wicked flee when no man pursueth," has never come under my observation. He says, "that the Committee, or any member thereof, by act or speech, ever evinced a disposition to exclusiveness with reference to denominations, is totally untrue." I say that this assertion is false, for the Editor knows that neither the Catholic nor Universalist Sabbath Schools, in "their denominational relationship," were invited; hence the committee did, "by act," at least, "evince a disposition to exclusiveness with reference to denominations." Again, this Editor says: "It was perfectly obvious from the first that ALL could not go, because the accommodations, although excellent in themselves, were not sufficiently ample to authorize it, and consequently some, through the force of unavoidable circumstances, HAD to be disappointed." Now, I say this is not true, either, for the Superintendent of the Road, having ascertained the Sectarianism of the arrangement, tendered to the Universalist School an entire car for the use of the children composing it, proving at once that the "accommodations were sufficiently ample." Of course the managers of the school could not force themselves into a Celebration from which they were designedly excluded, hence the polite offer was as politely declined.

A REPUBLICAN.

☞ Some editors have the oddest way imaginable of shuffling themselves out of a corner when they happen to be driven into one. To fight their way out honorably, to meet the foe face to face is no part of their tactics—Commercial.

In the above, that remarkable paper, the Commercial, "speaks like one inspired;" but when it comes to practice the virtue it lauds, it "ain't thar," as they say down among the woolly-heads. For instance, this "meet your foe face to face" prater, went into whig hysterics over a simple declaration in the Democratic platform that the "Constitution does not confer upon Congress the power to commence and carry on a general system of internal improvements," and when we, in reply, suggested that the best way to prove this declaration untrue, would be to point out the clause in that instrument conferring the power denied by the Democracy, it declined to do so, but to cover its stupidity, went into a personal review of our political history, a subject as foreign to the truth or falsehood of the declaration complained of as any thing possibly could be. It was then we began to suspect that our cotemporary had a very "odd way of shuffling himself out of a corner"—and a week or two confirmed the suspicion; for we then find him declaring that the "Observer considers the opposition of the Democratic party to River and Harbor improvements, a fixed improvements," having confined our remarks exclusively to "internal improvements," we called his attention to the fact, and at the same time took the liberty of pointing out to our learned critic, upon the authority of one of the best writers on political economy, the difference between the two kinds of improvements. Upon this the Commercial is silent; but in about a week, we presume, we shall have a chapter of personalities full of "learning, law and latin." Whether it will be a double "shuffle" or a summerset to get out of the corner is a question time can alone solve!

☞ The Oswego Palladium is a good paper, no doubt—an interesting paper—an able paper—but really we must say we have yet to see the evidence of it. We look it over every week—we turn it up side down and right side up, endways and sideways, and every way that a newspaper ought to be turned, but as yet we have never read the first sentence in one since it passed into the hands of its present proprietors. We wonder if the one we get weekly is a fair specimen of those sent to its subscribers; if so, what a "good time" the Democracy of Oswego must have among the "macks" and "friars" and such like evidences of the workmanship of the Palladium's press-man. But joking aside—we have not received a readable Palladium since the establishment passed into the hands of its present Editor.

☞ BETTER LATE THAN NEVER.—At Haverhill, Mass. last week, Mr. Timothy George, a bachelor of the mature age of 74, espoused Miss Anna Ordway, who had lived in a state of single blessedness for 81 years. What a happy young pair.

☞ The whig ratification meeting at Meadville is reported by the Sentinel as having been a decided failure; not more than three hundred persons of all ages being present, and no enthusiasm being manifested, although desperate efforts had been made to get up a large meeting.

☞ The whig papers say Scott never lost a battle. If our memory don't deceive us, Governor Marcy once vanquished him. The General complained however that Marcy kept up an uncomfortable "fire in the rear."

☞ The Ohio State Journal, anxiously asked, "Who is Pierce?" when it was informed by Medary of the Statesman, that he was one of those whom Corwin, the present Whig Secretary of the Treasury, wished the Mexicans would welcome with "bloody hands to hospitable graves!"

☞ The Commercial is not satisfied with the reasons we had for our belief of Gen. Scott's incapacity to administer the government so as to redound to our credit as a nation. We can't please that remarkable paper, no how. Do what we may it will growl—growl, as the familiar saying is, like a canine quadruped with a painful cranium! It called for reasons, and we gave it whig authority—woolly-head whig authority—for our belief, and lo, it still growls! Well, we can't help it—good whigs have said that Scott is a "vain, weak, silly man," his letters prove it, and we believe it.

☞ The "Union," Pittsburgh, should not be too critical upon the poetic flights and fancies of our neighbor of the Gazette. Our susceptible cotemporary is wont to use a poet's license, if he does'nt a poet's language, in his most common efforts. Hence, when he tells his readers, in describing a violinist, who recently performed in this place, that "sweeter, grander, more thrilling melody than came from his bow, he never listened to," he only means to be understood that cat-gut and rosin went it with a rush, at a quarter a head!

☞ The editor of the Louisville Democrat has been presented with a democratic chair, made entirely of hickory withs. It was presented by the Democracy of Brown county, Indiana, where, they say, there are few live whigs at present, and we believe the breed is expected to die out before November.

☞ We advise all whigs who are not yet satisfied of Gen. Scott's utter incompetency to fill the Presidential seat, to read his letter accepting the whig nomination for the Presidency. If that will not convince them, nothing will.

Firemen's Visit to Erie.

From the Conneaut Reporter.

On Monday the members of "Cataract Fire Company" of Conneaut, visited Erie, and united with the members of the Fire Department of that city in celebrating the 77th Anniversary of American Independence. Without any prior arrangement, they met with a generous welcome from Companies No. 2 and 3, also from the citizens generally. Many of our members had never visited Erie, and the opportunity was improved to the mutual advantages of all, and they speak in terms of high praise of their visit. Their reception was cordial, and their entertainment most liberal and generously bestowed, and was the occasion for cultivating pleasing associations, which will be long remembered. It was the beginning of a new era in social relation with the pleasant and thriving city of Erie, and its hospitable citizens.

Below will be found the proceedings of a meeting held at the Cataract Engine Room, on Tuesday evening, detailing their reception and entertainment at Erie; and also of their passage to and from that city:

CATARACT ENGINE ROOMS,
Conneaut, July 6, 1[illegible]

At a special meeting of the members of the C[illegible] Company, held this evening, it was moved that a committee be appointed to draft resolutions ex[illegible] their recent excursion to Erie, and the occasion of their sojourn in that city, viz: D. C. DEWEY, C[illegible] [illegible]AWAY, E. V. FENTON, G. D. GOULD, and S. B. W[illegible]

The committee reported the following:

1. That Captains HOWARD and HUBBELL, of the steamers Charter and Columbia, for their kindness and attention, merit and receive our hearty thanks.

2. That the prompt and cordial reception, generous welcome, and unbounded liberality of the Erie Fire Department extended to us, has been the occasion for cultivating social and fraternal ties that will never be effaced from our memory.

3. That for the assiduity and care of the Chief Engineer his subordinates, and privates in companies No. 2 and 3, to render our visit pleasant and instructive, has won our esteem, and placed us under obligations which will be reciprocated whenever they choose to visit our village, assuring them that the latch-string is never pulled in.

4. That we cannot refrain from expressing our thanks to the citizens of Erie for their courtesy, and to Major BROWN our full assurance that his reputation as "mine host" has been well earned, and for his readiness to supply our every want is entitled to our warmest regards.

The foregoing resolutions having been unanimously adopted, it was ordered that the proceedings be signed by the Foremen and Secretary, and published in the Reporter, and that a copy be forwarded to A. P. DURLIN, Esq. Chief Engineer of the Erie Fire Department, and to each of the papers of that city.

D. C. ALLEN, Foreman.

Attest, D. C. DEWEY, Secretary.

☞ A man in Portland says, he has fought with Gen. Scott, and is now ready to bleed for him if he will keep him in office.—Ex paper

Bleed the people for him, he means, probably. By the by, the Portland man's case is not singular or novel.—There was Taylor's Galphin cabinet—how the people did "bleed" under their administration, and how they will "bleed" under a similar Cabinet should Gen. Scott be elected.

☞ The whig party has evidently got the Consumption. Greeley says he "spits" upon the platform; and we see now that the expectorating symptoms of this malady has made its appearance in Pittsburgh. The Journal says it "spits" upon Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia; Charles J. Faulkner, of Va.; W. Brooke, of Miss.; Alexander White, of Ala.; James Abercrombie, of Ala.; R. Toombs, of Ga.; James Johnson, of Ga.; M. P. Gentry, Tenn.; C. H. Williams, Tenn.; all whig members of Congress, who refuse to take "soup."

☞ "KINDLE THE WATCH FIRES."—The Albany Evening Journal is calling upon its Whig friends to kindle the watch-fires. The fire (says the Hudson Gazette,) has already commenced in good earnest, but unfortunately for the General, it is "in the rear."

☞ The Clarion Democrat professes to be much rejoiced because our "side did'nt win" at Baltimore. If that is all the reason it has for joy, it may as well prepare to cry—for our side did win. Our side went in for some one that could be elected, and it mattered little to us whether that somebody was Sam Houston or Frank Pierce. We wanted some one the Democracy could all vote for, and we got the very man! We're satisfied!

☞ We see it stated that Nathaniel Hawthorne, one of the ripest scholars in the Union, and the author of many popular works, is engaged in writing a Life of General Pierce. Hawthorne and Pierce were classmates at College, and have been intimate friends ever since.

☞ TWO FACES.—The whig platform, as circulated North and South, has different planks in the 8th resolve. The finality plank is excluded at the North; the words "compromise and adjustment" are cut out, and dates are altered so as to approve of the acts of the 32d Congress instead of the 31st.

☞ The Boston Traveler, a whig paper, says that Gen. Scott's letter of acceptance strikingly exemplifies the remark that he "fights much better than he writes."—In appropriateness, simplicity, and felicity of expression, this letter is far behind that of Mr. Pierce.

☞ Willis, in speaking of the West Indies, says, the fields of sugar canes are so unprovided with fences that all a wayfarer has to do when he wants refreshment, is to cut a stick and suck. Dobbs, who has tried it, says the better way is, to suck and "cut stick," especially if the overseer keeps a bull dog.

☞ ANOTHER BANK AT CHICAGO.—Mr. Geo. [illegible] Esq., of the Wisconsin Fire & Marine Insurance Company, has filed the necessary papers at Springfield to entitle him to begin banking at Chicago. The Bank is to be called the City Bank of North America, and commences with a capital of $1,000,000.

A SLANDER NAILED.—In consequence of the malicious slander against Gen. Pierce by the New York Tribune, and other malicious prints, a gentleman of this State having business in Vermont last week, went to Concord, N. H., determined to learn for himself the truth or falsity of the charge of intemperance brought against Mr. Pierce. He informs us, (of which we were before well assured,) that there is not the slightest ground for such an accusation, and that such was the public indignation felt towards the author of the letter in the Tribune, that was he known, he would be tarred and feathered by the Whigs of Concord. Such was the general sentiment of people of all parties. No man in Concord enjoys more the respect of his fellow citizens, than Franklin Pierce—and no man is better entitled to it. The gentleman alluded to above, who saw Mr. Pierce for the first time, last week, speaks of him in the highest terms, as in every attribute a gentleman. New Haven Register.

☞ Ex-Gov. Johnston exerted a marked influence in the whig National Convention. He is a man of mark.—Erie Gazette.

Yes—he was a "marked man" last October, when a large majority of the people decided that he should vacate the Gubernatorial Chair of Pennsylvania.—Crawford Democrat.

HURRAH FOR THE CHEAP
CLOTHING STORE.

BILL.—Why, John what do you halloo for!

John.—O! if I should tell you all about it you would halloo worse than I did.

Bill.—Then tell me quick.

John.—Why, I was at JACOB KOCH'S Clothing Store, No. 7, Reed House, and such a sight, and such a selling, and such a crowd you never saw before. He sells Clothing twenty-five per cent cheaper than any other store this side of New York.

Bill.—Well, what has he got?

John.—He has all kinds of Coats you can imagine, from a fine black Dress Coat, down to a linen Coat; and in Vests he can't be beat. He has Satin Vests of all kinds, and has Velvet and Cloth Vests also, the best and prettiest you ever saw;—and he has the greatest assortment of Pants, in Erie, and he has them cloudy Pants, that new style just come out this Spring, and what else do you think he has? Why, a whole lot of Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings, and a man can go and get his measure taken for a whole suit for little or nothing.

Bill.—You have told me so much that I am bound to go there and buy.

John.—Now, hold on, I have not told you all yet. He has the best assortment of Collars, Shirts, Undershirts, Drawers, Pocket Handkerchiefs, Cravats, Traveling Bags and Umbrellas I ever saw.

Bill.—Now, I have but thirty-five dollars with me, but I will go and buy that much at any rate before he sells all.

John.—I bought a little, only forty five dollars worth and I can hardly carry them alone; but I am going home now, to get some more money and tell all the neighbors about, for I know its to their advantage, and you must know that most of the storekeepers keep the New York made Clothing, but he has the Cutter in the store and gets every thing made here.

Bill.—Now, I know that they don't half sew goods in N. York.

John.—And another thing he sells only for cash, and I like it first rate, because it is always best to pay for what you get. Now, I tell what his Motto is, a good one too—" Quick Sales and Small Profits." Well good bye to you, but don't forget it is No. 7, Reed House, North side of the Diamond.

ERIE DAGUERREAN GALLERY,
Park Row, a few doors West of the REED HOUSE.

SHERMAN is happy to invite all who wish DAGUERREOTYPE LIKENESSES, who are at all particular what kind of pictures they have, to his new Rooms which have been built expressly for the Art. LIGHT is the great agent of the Artist, and it has been the constant study of all worthy of the name since the Art was discovered, to employ and control it in the manner best adapted to produce the most favorable results. The result of this study and of thousands of experiments is that there is not a respectable permanent Gallery in the U. States where the pictures are made by a common window, and he who says he can produce superior pictures by such a window proves his ignorance of the Art. The subscriber therefore begs leave to say that by his superior LIGHT, and with an apparatus worth six times any other in this city, he is enabled to produce pictures which cannot be equelled in this part of the country, and offers to excell any thing which can be produced in other rooms in Erie, or forfeit one hundred dollars. He has also a splendid Quick Working Camera, with which he takes children of any age. Let it be distinctly understood that pictures will not fade if properly kept.

N. B.—The "recent improvements" may be seen at the above rooms. W. H SHERMAN.

CLEAR THE TRACK!!

Much has been said about buying goods for cash and selling less than others dare, no gassing &c. We would briefly say that we have employed expressly for the purchasing of goods $30,000 and the Senior partner of 28 years experience, devoting the whole of his time to the purchasing of goods by the bale and case directly from the men that make them, at low rates as any New York or Boston house can buy them, thus giving us the advantage over other houses that buy their goods of jobbing houses, of at least 1 to 2 cents on prints per yard, and 50 cts. to $1.50 on Broad cloths and all other goods in proportion. We can and will job goods as low as any jobbing house in New York or Boston. Gents and ladies just take a look at the piles of goods we are daily receiving from H. Cadwell and see if those things are not so. Auction goods we do not buy except to sell at auction again.

A SURE CURE FOR THE PILES.

A POSITIVE remedy is now known for this most distressing disease, in L. A. Page's ANODYNE OIL. This we expect to be believed until evidence is examined and made. Procure a pamphlet from the agent and see its effects. If your faith is still wavering, sufferer, we entreat you to try a bottle, and confirm the fact by your own experience. Hundreds have doubted like you, and by a trial, are now rejoicing in a perfect cure. The use of one bottle will either cure, or satisfy that another will accomplish the work. You need not buy it by the dozen. This is applied to the seat of the disease as to the parts visibly affected; decomposes the tumors and heals the soreness all at the same time. Its virtue is testing, and this is its best recommendation. Whoever is pressed with this disagreeable malady, may be relieved and cured by the Anodyne Oil The directions are full and concise and should be strictly followed in order to insure success, and is the sufferer who will not try it. DR. HOOFLAND'S
CELEBRATED GERMAN BITTERS

PREPARED BY

DR. C. M. JACKSON,
AT THE GERMAN MEDICINE STORE,
120, Arch Street, Philadelphia,

Their power over the above diseases is not excelled—if equalled—by any other preparation in the United States as the cures attest, in many cases after skillful physicians had failed

These Bitters are worthy the attention of invalids. Possessing great virtues in the rectification of diseases of the Liver and lesser glands, exercising the most searching powers in weakness and affections of the digestive organs, they are withal, safe, certain and pleasant.

READ AND BE CONVINCED,

—From the "Boston Bee."

The editor said, Dec. 22nd—

Dr. Hoofland's Celebrated German Bitters for the cure of Liver Complaint, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Chronic or Nervous Debility, is deservedly one of the most popular medicines of the day. These Bitters have been used by thousands, and a friend at our elbow says he has himself received an effectual and permanent cure of Liver Complaint from the use of this remedy. We are convinced that, in the use of these Bitters, the patient constantly gains strength and vigor—a fact worthy of great consideration. They are pleasant in taste and smell, and can be used by persons with the most delicate stomachs with safety, under any circumstances. We are speaking from experience, and to the afflicted we advise their use.

"SCOTT'S WEEKLY," one of the best Literary papers published, said, Aug. 25—

"DR. HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS, manufactured by Dr Jackson, are now recommended by some of the most prominent members of the faculty as an article of much efficacy in cases of female weakness. As such is the case, we would advise all mothers to obtain a bottle, and thus save themselves much sickness. Persons of debilitated constitutions will find these Bitters advantageous to their health, as we know from experience the salutary effect they have upon weak systems."

MORE EVIDENCE.

The "Philadelphia Saturday Gazette," the best family newspaper in the United States. The editor says of

DR. HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS.

"It is seldom that we recommend what are termed Patent Medicines, to the confidence and patronage of our readers; and therefore when we recommend Dr. Hoofland's German Bitters we wish it to be distinctly understood that we are not speaking of the nostrums of the day, that are noised about for a brief period and then forgotten after they have done their guilty race of mischief, but of a medicine long established, universally prized, and which has met the hearty approval of the faculty itself."

Evidence upon evidence has been received (like the foregoing) from all sections of the Union, the last three years, and the strongest testimony in its favor, is, that there is more of it used in the practice of the regular Physicians of Philadelphia, than all other nostrums combined; a fact that can easily be established, and fully proving that a scientific preparation will meet with their quiet approval when presented even in this form.

That this medicine will cure Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia, no one can doubt after using it as directed. It acts specifically upon the stomach and liver; it is preferable to calomel in all bilious diseases - the effect is immediate. They can be administered to females, or infants, with safety and reliable benefit at any time.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS.

This medicine has attained that high character which is necessary for all medicines to attain to induce counterfeiters to put forth spurious articles at the risk of the lives of those who are innocently deceived.

Look well to the marks of the Genuine.

They have the written signature of C. M. JACKSON upon the wrapper, and his name blown in the bottle, without which they are spurious.
